

The White House

Executive Branch

The elected President is the leader of the second branch of the U.S. Government. The President makes sure that the laws are followed and is responsible for spending money according to the laws of Congress. Also, he commands the navy, air force and army. The President lives and works in the White House, located in Washington, D.C.